

OUR AUSTIN STORY IS GROWING

Join the Austin History Center Association today.

You see evidence of it every day — more people coming and going, another new business pops up, expanding opportunities. Our Austin story is growing.

In 1979, a group of citizens rallied the community and convinced the Austin City Council to transform the old public library into a place where the stories of Austin's past and present could be collected and preserved — the Austin History Center.

Today, the Austin History Center is a cultural touchstone in the frenzy that is Austin in the 21st Century. Thousands pass through our doors each year accessing more than a million documents, photographs and recordings that tell our unique Austin story. And what a story it is! Now the Austin History Center is expanding its campus and operations next door into the John Henry Faulk Library building. Indeed, our Austin story is growing.

Your membership in the Austin History Center Association continues the legacy for which that first group of Austinites fought more than 40 years ago. It includes your pass to special insider events at iconic Austin locations.

See the places. Meet the faces. Hear the stories. Know your Austin history. Join today!

"One of the premier local archives in the country."

– Library Journal

More than one million Austin history documents dating from before the city's founding in 1839 will expand into our larger building next door—the Faulk.

"In my 35 years as an archivist and curator, I have never visited a repository...more efficient and helpful...truly...exceeding...needs."
